NAME THE NEXT BIG THING IN MCKINLEYVILLE

The land is purchased—now it's time to name the community!

Life Plan Humboldt is building a nonprofit community for Humboldt folks over 62, and it's officially becoming a reality! Land has been secured in a walkable, accessible location in the heart of McKinleyville's Town Center—just minutes from Clam Beach and steps from a year-round farmers market. With organic gardens, a friendly neighborhood atmosphere, and easy access to trails and natural beauty, this will be a place to grow, give back, and continue to learn.

But first, a name is needed that reflects the spirit of this unique community, created by Humboldt, for Humboldt.

Help name it! Submit ideas at NameLPH.org. Submissions will be accepted online until July 15, 2025.

Editorial Changes and a Fond Farewell

By Melissa Sanderson

Change is never easy, but sometimes it's exactly what a newsroom needs to grow, evolve and step into its next chapter. That time is now for the North Coast Journal.

We're both proud and a little heartbroken to announce that our esteemed news editor Thadeus Greenson is leaving his post to join the nonprofit First Amendment Coalition, where he'll continue working with journalists throughout the state, providing support and education to further government transparency. His commitment to truth and accountability has been a guiding force at the Journal, and while we'll miss his daily presence, we're thrilled that his voice will now echo even further. Thankfully, this isn't goodbye. Thad will remain in Humboldt County and, hopefully, contribute his reporting to the Journal on a freelance basis moving forward.

With change comes opportunity, and we're thrilled to announce Jennifer Fumiko-Cahill as our new managing editor. Jenn brings heart, wit, strong editorial instincts and a sharp eye for storytelling that resonates across Humboldt County. She's more than ready to steer the ship into our next era.

Kim Wear returns in her new role as assistant editor. Formerly the Journal's digital editor, Kim brings her keen editing skills, steady presence and decades of experience in Humboldt County newsrooms to our pages once again.

Please join us in congratulating Thad, Jenn and Kim on their new roles.

In Gratitude

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

This is the 600th edition of the North Coast Journal that I've had some hand in publishing as the newspaper's news editor. It will also be the last.

For more than a decade, just about every Tuesday of my life has been consumed with finishing up the week's paper. It's been a regular ritual, the culmination of a week's work, that includes getting its stories finished and edited, its captions proofread and its page numbers double checked, helping put together an edition that honors readers' trust and gives them the information they need to live their best North Coast lives. I lovingly call it "putting the paper to bed," which conjures the image of tucking it in for a night's sleep before seeing it rise on newsstands a couple days later. But after 11 and a half years on the job, I'm ready for a change, and next week will begin work as a press education specialist for the nonprofit First Amendment Coalition, helping provide support and training to journalists across the state.

As I prepare to step away from some 20 years of local reporting, I'm feeling many things. I'm honestly tired; the daily and weekly deadlines, the post-deadline doubts that interrupt sleep at 3 a.m., and the fatigue that comes with regularly hearing of people's worst moments and exploring society's faults without power to do much more than tell people about them all having taken a toll. I'm frustrated, too, that I've watched investment in Humboldt County journalism wither, recalling that when I started at the Times-Standard, it had nine full-time news reporters (and another daily down the street had nearly as many), while today there may not be that many paid full-time journalists in the entire county. Frustrated that I took a pay cut 20 years ago when I left the dog kennel I was working at to write for the Times-Standard, and that reporters today still start at minimum wage with few going on to make much more. And I'm angry to see journalists vilified and dismissed, not just nationally, but locally, our email inboxes evidencing a decaying trust in the people who overwhelmingly work long hours under high stress for little pay with the simple goal of being accurate and fair, and keeping a community informed.

But the thing I undoubtedly feel most acutely as I prepare to leave the North Coast Journal is gratitude. Profound gratitude. It has been the honor of my professional life to help guide the news side of this paper for the time it has been entrusted to me, and I'll forever be grateful to have had this experience.

I'm grateful to my family, who have consistently sacrificed in ways big and small to enable and support me to do this work. I'm grateful to everyone I've worked with at the North Coast Journal over the last 11 and a half years, each of whom has contributed to our ability to serve the local community and to my ability to do this thing I've loved. I'm grateful to our publisher and owner, Melissa Sanderson, who has purchased two iconic print newspapers in recent years, not with illusions of riches, but simply recognizing that the community needed them to continue.

I'm grateful to you, our readers, who have supported this work, have found value in what we do, have picked up the paper and frequented its advertisers. I'm grateful to those of you who have written in, either to contribute your thoughts to our opinion pages or just to let me know what you felt. I'm especially grateful for those who wrote to say I got it wrong or missed something (most especially those who did it respectfully and kindly), for those are the notes that pushed us to be better, to rise to the challenge of reflecting and chronicling a community as complex and special as Humboldt.

I'm grateful to my sources, the people who trusted me to tell their stories with care and respect, and to get them right. Over 20 years, it's never ceased to amaze me the ways people have opened their lives, homes, camps, offices and hearts to me without promise of anything in return other than my best effort to accurately portray their views and experiences. You've told me of your triumphs and tragedies, your hopes and fears, opened up about your ideas and passions, shared your wisdom and knowledge, often with profound patience as I struggled to keep up and make sure I was understanding correctly.

NCJ EDITORIAL

I'm grateful to the elected officials and appointed government employees who have been giving and generous with their time and expertise, and who have been kind and gracious amid unflattering stories and coverage of things they did not want to talk about. I appreciate that you took my calls simply because it was right to do what you could to help maintain an informed electorate.

Last but certainly not least, I'm eternally grateful for the talented, inspired, driven, caring and deeply passionate journalists I've had the privilege to work with over the years. There are too many to list individually here, but I believe you know who you are, and know that your contributions have made me a better editor and person, the North Coast Journal a better newspaper and Humboldt County a better community. Thank you.

Among those, I need to single out our current editorial staff, who together comprise the heart, mind and soul of our newsroom. Calendar editor Kali Cozyris is the heart, her passion for this community and dedication to the paper apparent to everyone who crosses her path, her kindness and compassion providing much of the glue that's held us together. Former digital editor and soon-to-be assistant editor Kimberly Wear is the mind, her institutional knowledge of all things Humboldt County having provided invaluable context and saved us from countless errors, her stalwart attention to detail elevating the quality of every single edition she's been a part of. Former arts and features editor and soon-to-be managing editor Jennifer Fumiko Cahill is the fiery soul, her moral compass having ensured we've been on the right side of every ethical issue and stance since I've been here, and her unmatched skill, wit and insight having allowed us to showcase the best of Humboldt, even in the hardest of times.

With Jennifer Fumiko Cahill at its helm, and Kali and Kim by her side, the Journal will continue to grow in its mission to be a more vibrant and invaluable newspaper, and one that reflects the entirety of the North Coast, with an editorial leader who will not flinch or falter. And for that, there are no words to express my gratitude. ●

Outgoing news editor Thadeus Greenon's (he/him) last official day with the Journal will be July 3 but you'll continue to see his byline in the coming weeks as the paper publishes several in-progress stories, and perhaps some of his freelance work in the future beyond that.

Feeling tipsy?

If you have a news tip, story idea or something you'd like to see covered, we'd love to hear from you!

Political commentator Katie Phang got it right when she characterized Trump's Big Beautiful Bill as the "Bless the Billionaires Bill" (Mailbox, June 19). It takes necessary support away from the less fortunate to free up dollars for the rich who don't need them.

'For-profit Siloing of Information'

Editor:
Sheila Evans' letter (Mailbox, June 26) mentions outcrai.com, which she describes as a "positive" use of AI. The site is an abusive exploitation of people's tendency to think that if AI says it, it must be the truth. It presents the point of view of its developers, rather than an "old-fashioned" attempt to get at the truth. Democratic society has been corroded by the internet's for-profit siloing of information. Everyone is handed material confirming their own perspective on complex issues. Controversies where many shades of gray exist are presented as black and white. Outcrai.com has brought this siloing to AI chatbots.

I'd expected such abuse to be created by totalitarian governments, not "activists." I should have known better.

‘This Tax Could Kill This Industry’

Struggling California cannabis operators brace for increase

By Alexei Koseff, CalMatters

A substantial tax hike for California’s faltering legal cannabis market took effect July 1, despite an aggressive industry campaign to suspend the increase that won the support of Gov. Gavin Newsom and other political leaders.

The excise tax for weed is 19 percent as of July 1, up from 15 percent — the result of a political deal three years ago that was intended to buy more time for the legal market to stabilize but which cannabis business operators now warn could chase away customers and push them over the edge.

“I’ve never experienced collective malaise like this,” said Genine Coleman, founder of the Origins Council, which represents small farmers in the historic Northern California growing region known as the Emerald Triangle. “People are so concerned with their survival and so deflated. It’s a dangerous space.”

An excise tax is a levy imposed on a good by the state before sales taxes are applied. While a push to freeze the cannabis excise tax through the state budget failed last month, a bill that would lower the rate back to 15 percent for the next six years is still moving through the Legislature. Newsom has pledged to sign a proposal halting the tax increase if it reaches his desk.

“I’m intimately familiar with the conversations around that and have great confidence that we’ll achieve our stated goals,” Newsom said during a June 30 press conference.

Cannabis growers, dispensary owners and consumer advocates rallied for months at the state Capitol to avert the tax increase, which they argue could deal a fatal blow to businesses already operating with slim margins.

The price of weed has plummeted since voters legalized recreational cannabis through Proposition 64 in 2016, the result of a rush to overproduction even as most cities and counties in the state remain closed off to retail sales. Meanwhile, California is struggling to bring its market out of the shadows; the state Department of Cannabis Control estimates that legal sales still comprise less than 40 percent of weed consumption in California, which the industry attributes to state and local excise and sales taxes that can increase prices for consumers by a third.

Taxable cannabis sales in California dropped to $1.09 billion for the first quarter of 2025, down 30 percent from their peak in early 2021 and the lowest quarterly sales in five years.

Tax Was Intended to Offset Cannabis Harms

It’s a crisis for the industry — communities that traditionally relied on cannabis production have collapsed economically — but also a problem for the state’s finances. Tax revenues from weed sales provide guaranteed funding for child care slots, environmental cleanup, substance abuse education and impaired driving prevention efforts as California faces a growing budget deficit.

“This was a poor time to say, ‘let’s starve the state even more,’” said Tom Wheeler, the executive director of the Humboldt County-based Environmental Protection Information Center, which joined a coalition of child care, environmental and tribal advocacy groups to lobby against a tax freeze.

He said it was important to uphold the promise of Proposition 64, which includes using cannabis tax revenue for programs that offset the harms caused by the cannabis industry, and expressed skepticism that the tax increase would hurt sales.

"I think the average consumer would not notice that," Wheeler said. "At what point do we stop cutting taxes to benefit the industry?"

The 2022 agreement offered relief to growers by eliminating a cultivation tax, but it allowed state regulators, after a three-year pause, to raise the excise tax to make up for the lost revenue.

During budget negotiations last month, Newsom — who also wants to begin using cannabis tax revenue for enforcement against illegal cultivation — and Assembly Speaker Robert Rivas, a Democrat from Salinas, supported extending the pause on the excise tax. But they could not reach a compromise with Senate President Pro Tem Mike McGuire, a Healdsburg Democrat who notably represents the Emerald Triangle.

In a statement, McGuire said, "Taxes on California's overregulated cannabis industry have been a train wreck for years," but he raised concerns about the fiscal implications of freezing the tax. State analysts estimate that increasing it to 19 percent could yield about $180 million per year for the state.

"It's important to acknowledge that any freeze will create a budget shortfall which would impact critical community programs funded by cannabis tax dollars," he said.

California Could 'Forfeit a Huge Opportunity'

Industry representatives warn that further raising taxes will push price-sensitive customers back into the illicit market, hurting businesses teetering on the edge and actually lowering cannabis tax revenue in the long run.

"The math isn't there," said Amy O'Gorman Jenkins, executive director and lobbyist for the California Cannabis Operators Association. "We have no objections to how cannabis tax revenues are being spent. All we're maintaining is that you can't squeeze blood from a stone."

They haven't given up, though repealing the tax increase now that it's taken effect will be even more challenging.

Assembly Bill 564, which would set the cannabis excise tax at 15 percent through the end of June 2031, passed the Assembly unanimously in May and now awaits consideration in the Senate.

Assemblymember Matt Haney, the San Francisco Democrat who introduced the measure, said he will keep fighting to get it to the governor. But he was furious that the Senate allowed the tax hike to take effect, which he said sent a message to legal cannabis operators that there is no incentive to follow the rules.

"This tax could kill this industry and there's still not enough being done," he said. "California is going to forfeit what should have been a huge opportunity for our state." ●

Huffman: Senate Budget Bill a 'Betrayal'

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

North Coast Congressmember Jared Huffman issued a blistering statement calling the budget bill narrowly passed by Senate Republicans shortly before the Journal went to press July 1 a "betrayal," warning it will have devastating economic, environmental and health impacts.

"The Senate just jammed through a scorched-earth reconciliation bill so toxic that it is worse than the House version, if you can believe it," Huffman said in a statement issued shortly after Vice President J.D. Vance voted to break a 50-50 tie to send the revised domestic policy bill back to the House for consideration. "It takes away healthcare from millions of Americans, rips food assistance from kids and seniors, and guts the very safeguards that protect our clean air and water — all to reward the same fossil fuel CEOs Trump asked for a billion-dollar campaign check. It props up the dirt energy of the past, suffocates clean energy and sticks American families with higher costs, dirtier air and water, and growing floods, fires and climate disasters."

The bill seeks to make permanent tax cuts passed during the first Trump administration in 2017 that experts say disproportionately benefit the wealthy and large corporations. Budget analysts project the bill would add $3.3 trillion to the federal budget deficit over the next decade — the equivalent of what it would cost to gift every U.S. household $25,000 — with provisions eliminating inheritance taxes on estates valued up to $15 million per person and maintaining a 2.6 percent tax break for the nation's highest earners, individuals making at least $639,000 annually. (The nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office, meanwhile, estimates the wealthiest 10 percent of Americans now control 60 percent of the nation's wealth, while the poorest 50 percent of the country combines to control just 6 percent.)

To mitigate the fiscal impact of the tax cuts, the bill has provisions that would change Medicaid requirements, making them more onerous, which nonpartisan analysts project would lead to nearly 12 million Americans losing health insurance

The reconciliation bill approved by the Senate on July 1 includes a 20-percent reduction in funding for programs providing nutritional assistance to the poor, including seniors and children.

Submitted

over the next decade. Additionally, the bill would cut the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program, which provides food stamps to low-income Americans, by 20 percent, and roll back tax credits for solar and wind energy project and impose new taxes on them. The bill also includes increased appropriations to fund Trump's mass deportation efforts and increased military spending, while creating tax advantaged savings accounts for newborns with an $1,000 government contribution.

The bill now heads back to the House for consideration and possible passage.

While Journal efforts to reach a host of local officials following the Senate's July 1 vote were unsuccessful, they have previously expressed grave concerns about the proposed Medicaid cuts. Nearly 25 percent of Humboldt County residents are covered by Medicaid, according to a Georgetown University report, and officials have warned that significant cuts would have dramatic impacts on healthcare delivery on the North Coast.

Open Door Community Health Centers CEO Tory Starr warned the proposed cuts would result in thousands of people in Humboldt and Del Norte counties losing coverage, while a spokesperson for Providence Health said the cuts included in the bill would have "devastating impacts on healthcare" on the North Coast. The Area 1 Agency on Aging warned that the proposed 30-percent cut in nutrition assistance funding would hurt seniors and children.

The revised bill now heads back to the House, which narrowly passed a previous version along mostly partisan lines in May, as polls show roughly 60 percent of the nation disapproves of it.

"Republicans better be ready to explain why they're ripping up healthcare and food assistance, selling out public lands, gutting clean air and water safeguards, and driving up energy bills, all so big billionaires and big oil CEOs can get richer," Huffman said. ●

Wiyot youth housing project breaks ground aiming to provide a safety net

By Thadeus Greenson

Wiyot Councilmember Leo James examines demolition work in one of the buildings that will be transformed into the Jaroujiji Youth Housing Project.

When the Wiyot Tribe decided to leverage its resources to tackle Humboldt County's housing crisis, it didn't just start buying land to develop. Instead, tribal officials spent two years listening.

"We spent two years studying housing," says Dishgamu Community Land Trust Director Michelle Vassel. "We went to big events, farmers markets and just asked people about housing. We found two ends of the spectrum really suffering: young people, because their wages tend to be lower, and older people because they're on fixed incomes. So we've tried to prioritize these two groups."

The tribe — which is already moving forward with plans to build a 41-unit multi-family complex and a 42-unit senior living facility in Eureka — recently broke ground on a project aimed solely at serving local youth. With a $14 million California Department of Housing and Community Development grant, the tribe and its partners have begun work to convert two Victorian homes and an old commercial building into a 39-unit complex serving young adults ages 16 to 24 at risk of becoming unhoused.

Dubbed the Jaroujiji Youth Housing Project — with Jaroujiji meaning a place to stop and rest in the Wiyot language — Vassel said the vision is to create a layered supportive housing program that somewhat resembles a dorm or boarding house. She said each resident will have their own private space, including a bathroom and mini kitchen, within a facility that features a multitude of shared spaces, on-site management and a commercial kitchen that will provide residents daily meals.

And Vassel says there will be plenty of wrap-around services included, everything from outside groups being invited in to the facility's shared spaces to provide mental health and social services, to tribal led social services and internal paid apprenticeship programs, like working in the kitchen to get culinary industry work experience.

While not generally envisioned as transitional housing — Vassel says 31 of the project's units will be classified as permanent housing — it will include eight units reserved for interim housing for 16 to 18 year olds needing rapid rehousing.

Vassel says the tribe's initial work listening to the community, and particularly young people in the community, helped shape every aspect of the project. While tabling at events, Vassel says the tribe heard directly from young people about their struggles to find housing, particularly from those who said they didn't have a natural support system or were just leaving foster care.

"They are just released into this really tough housing market where prices are really high," Vassel says, adding that the problem is acute for foster youth who end up receiving mental health care outside the local area and then return to Humboldt when aging out of the system. "There's just no safety net for them."

The Jaroujiji Youth Housing Project, which sits just north of the library's main branch, will convert two single-story Victorian homes — one the famed Sarah Carson House, a 160-year-old Victorian where William and Sarah Carson made their first home in Eureka before building the Carson Mansion that was more recently used as a convalescent home — and a sprawling old office building into a cohesive complex complete with landscaped green spaces.

Ashton Hamm and Alice Armstrong, both worker/owners at UXO Architects, a worker-owned cooperative, say they've been involved with Jaroujiji almost since its inception, having worked with the Wiyot Tribe since 2020 "on various projects and speculations."

Armstrong says the tribe came to UXO having identified the Eureka properties and with an idea of what it wanted to accomplish, and the architectural firm then helped scope the project for an initial grant application.

"They really came to us with such a clear vision of what they want to bring the community as far as deep sustainability, really involving the community and potential residents in the design process, and reaching out to specific communities that weren't being served," Hamm says on a video conferencing call with the Journal before Armstrong jumps in.

"I think from the beginning of this project, we identified a desire to do a lot of outreach directly to the communities that might be served by this housing, as well as local organizations that will be working with this population," Armstrong says.

Thus, they say, began a listening tour of UXO's own, which included Zoom sessions and roundtable discussions to ask young people and service providers about specific design features they'd like to see.

"They really came to us with such a clear vision of what they want to bring the community as far as deep sustainability, really involving the community and potential residents in the design process..."

"They got really granular," Hamm says with a laugh. "We get some really excellent feedback, everything from how you feel safe in a space to the level of light and noise in a space that residents would feel comfortable with."

And while some firms may have been turned off by the dynamic nature of bringing so many voices into the planning process, Hamm and Armstrong say they have relished it. One theme they say arose early and continued throughout all their discussions is a perceived need for community spaces — places residents can feel safe and gather together. So they say the designs worked to maximize that inside and out.

Vassel says the tribe has put an emphasis on keeping jobs local with its projects, so it turned to Blaine O'Shaughnessy of Arcata's Curb Appeal Construction to bring the vision crafted with UXO Architects' help to fruition.

O'Shaughnessy says, from his perspective, the job is just one "really big remodel" that will include a lot of improvements to bring the properties into compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act. He says there are unique challenges in converting a commercial space to residential and remodeling century-old homes, so there are "a lot of facets" to the project, which he hopes to have fully complete in the spring.

While addressing Humboldt County's housing crisis, Vassel notes that Jaroujiji is also supporting the local workforce, bringing money from outside the county to sustain living-wage jobs. And she notes there's an apprentice aspect there, too.

"One of the things we're asking of the people we're working with is to allow us to provide people who are interested in doing construction work so they can just get that on-the-job experience," she says, adding the hope is that may lead to some filling long-term positions.

Vassel says she also likes that Jaroujiji is an infill project, noting that it fulfills one of the Dishgamu land trust's priorities: "Buy things that are unloved and put love back into them."

This latest housing project puts the Wiyot Tribe squarely at the forefront of efforts to build affordable housing in Eureka, as it now has plans in process to open a total of more than 130 units by 2028.

Those include a 41-apartment project at the parking lot on Fifth and D streets, which will feature sustainable construction, units for various household sizes, exterior garden space, on-site daycare and is known as Gou'Wik Hou Daqh, or Where the Families Are. Laquilh Hou Daqh (Where the Elders Are), meanwhile, is a 52-unit project at Sixth and L streets that will feature mostly studio and one-bedroom apartments for seniors.

Each of the tribe's housing projects has targeted a specific need, and Jaroujiji is no different. Humboldt County Department of Health and Human Services Child Welfare Services Program Manager Alison Phongsavath says the "highly competitive rental market in California, and Humboldt especially, can be a significant barrier for young people exiting foster care."

A 2024 report from the California Housing Partnership found more than 6,000 renting households in Humboldt County do not have access to a home that qualifies as affordable, while 93 percent of households classified as "extremely low income" are spending more than half their monthly income on housing costs. The report found renters in Humboldt County would need to earn at least $23.25 per hour — one-and-a-half times the state minimum wage — to afford the monthly asking rent of $1,209.

Humboldt County has historically had a disproportionately high number of youth in foster care compared to the state average, its foster care population peaking in 2019 in 432, before declining in recent years. Native youth have also historically been disproportionately represented in the foster system. According to the National Foster Care Institute, about 25 percent of youth in foster care experience homelessness within four years of aging out of care.

Phongsavath says the county has ongoing partnerships with various local agencies, including Redwood Community Action Agency's Transitional Housing Plus program, for former foster youth, but "there remains an unmet need for foster youth exiting care."

The county, she says, is working to apply for housing vouchers from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development for foster youth exiting care who meet the definition of being at risk of homelessness.

"The more housing resources there are to help support positive outcomes for former foster youth, where the county and the community were not able to help them achieve permanency, the better," Phongsavath says. "We know that connection to cultural identities and supports are an important part of a young person's

"We're trying to invest care and concern"

— Michelle Vassel

healing and thriving, and we are excited to see the Wiyot Tribe's new Youth Housing Project become available."

Vassel says she is excited about the project because it will address a clearly identified need, providing local youth that much needed safety net. Dishgamu, the Soulatluk word for love, guides the tribe's building philosophy, she says.

"We're trying to invest care and concern," she says. "When I think of love, I think when you care about someone you're investing care and concern in them."

O'Shaughnessy, who stepped into the fold after the vision for Jaroujiji was solidified, said the excitement around the project is infectious.

"Even the guys that work on it — our laborers and framers — feel it because they know the intention of it," he says. "It does make a different feel when you're working on it — it's not just for someone's profit. It's going to help people." ●

Outgoing news editor Thadeus Greenson's (he/him) last official day with the Journal will be July 3 but you'll continue to see his byline in the coming weeks as the paper publishes several in-progress stories, and perhaps some of his freelance work in the future beyond that.

UXO Architecture worked extensively with the local youth this project is intended to serve to craft site plans that meet their needs.

Kokoro Ramen Opens with Comfort

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

A feathery betta fish painted by muralist Kyle Sanders drifts above the red door to Kokoro Ramen in Eureka's Old Town (409 Opera Alley). Owner Joe Tan, who can look down at it from nearby Rooftop, where he's behind the sushi counter most days, has been looking for a place to open a traditional Japanese ramen shop for the better part of a decade. Traditional, in this case, meaning focused on one specialty, rather than the array of Japanese offerings from ramen to sushi that has become standard in the U.S.

The Malaysian-born Tan fell in love with ramen in Japan, where he worked making sushi and met his wife, Nami. "We love ramen, my kids love ramen. We love noodles, so it's kind of my dream," says Tan. Kokoro translates literally as "heart" in Japanese, but touches on connection to body and mind, perhaps closer to soul — fitting for a casual spot for warm bowls of comfort food.

The Opera Alley spot, formerly home to Opera Alley Bistro and Café Nooner before that, was always cozy, bordering on cramped. But a brief, specialized menu suits a smaller kitchen, and widening the pass-through windows onto the space has opened it up. The room now seats 30 without bumping bowls. It's a bit late in the season, but Tan says he's received clearance for patio dining from the city, so look for outdoor tables next summer.

"In town, I don't see ... any tonkotsu, so I wanted to have something different," says Tan, who adds he likes the other types of ramen he's sampled around the county. Kokoro's tonkotsu is a paler, milkier broth made from boiling pork and chicken bones, as well as vegetables and aromatics, for six to eight hours until the liquid becomes opaque. The result is a silky, rich and satisfying soup, though not particularly fatty, paired with straight, thin egg noodles that Kokoro tops with bamboo, seasoned soft-boiled egg, spirals of grilled chashu pork belly, slivered green onion, wood ear mushroom, nori and tart pickled ginger ($18).

Paitan broth, made with chicken bones, ginger, vegetables and a whole young chicken, takes a shorter four hours but has almost as much body as tonkotsu with a lighter flavor. It's a good fit with the tan tan ramen, spiked to orange with red chile and topped with spicy ground beef, wilted bok choy, fresh mung bean sprouts and green onion ($18). It's more salty and warming than truly hot or sesame-heavy like versions that hew closer to the dish's Szechuan roots. (The bold can toss out an extra dollar for more fire.)

Fans of simpler soy sauce base and miso broth — the former made with chicken, the latter with chicken and pork — will find them on the menu, too. Vegetarian ramen gets its due with a broth enriched with cashew butter and soy milk, served with spinach noodles and grilled tofu, cherry tomatoes, peppers, sprouts and corn ($18).

There are familiar, homey appetizers like Spam musubi, a pair of rice balls topped with grilled, salty slices in classic Hawaiian style and an additional hit of Kewpie brand mayonnaise ($6). Those compelled to snack on the crunchy bits in the package when making instant ramen will find themselves at home with the cheeky social snack Hot Noods, fried seasoned ramen noodles with furikake seasoning, avocado and aioli to dip into for ($10).

But the karaage is not to be missed ($12). Hunks of chicken thigh marinated overnight with soy sauce are tossed in potato starch and fried, yielding a thinly pebbled, crunchy surface and flavorful, marvelously juicy meat within. The citrusy yuzu Kewpie mayo dotted with pickle both adds and balances the fat. One might be tempted to order a bowl of rice and call it a meal, if the contented slurping and sighs from other tables didn't hint at other soul-warming things to come. ●

Pride on Parade in Ferndale

On Sunday, June 29, more than 100 people in colorful clothes and good spirits showed up to stroll the streets of Ferndale during the town's fifth annual Pride Walk. After starting off from the Old Steeple and making their way up Main Street, rainbow Pride flags aloft, participants gathered at Fireman's Park for a festival with vendors.

Photographer Alexander Anderson was on hand to capture highlights of the walk. See more of his photos at northcoastjournal.com.

Tips for Celebrating the Fourth of July in 2025

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

Ambivalence about Independence Day festivities is as old as the holiday itself — bold move declaring all men equal while you're still running chattel slavery. And genocide. You could say having misgivings amid the parades is traditional. In his 1852 address “What to the Slave is the Fourth of July?” Frederick Douglass noted, “The blessings in which you, this day, rejoice, are not enjoyed in common.”

But even if your family tree doesn't bear the scars of disenfranchisement or outright enslavement, lighting up a sparkler right now, as our nation cannonballs into the piss-warm pool of fascism, feels weird, man.

Here are some ideas for participating in America's birthday despite the last-call-for-democracy vibe.

Think of it as retro. Who needs historical reenactments? We've actually re-created the conditions that led to the American Revolution in the first place: a government hellbent on wildly unpopular policies, tax breaks for corporations, government agents busting into homes and searching — even grabbing people off the streets — without warrants or due process. You could almost call them intolerable acts. All we're missing is tricornered hats! That and the Founding Mothers had largely unfettered access to abortion until the 1860s. (Well, only our white foremothers, what with the chattel slavery.) Just think of the suddenly pro-mask ICE agents as Redcoats. Assuming they're ICE and not randos cosplaying Desert Storm to toss people in vans with zero authority.

Host a cookout in the backyard. This is a great opportunity to practice the outdoor cooking you may need if/when society collapses and the rapidly deregulated food system crumbles. Somebody check and see if U.S. Secretary of Health and Human Services Robert F. Kennedy Jr. has already posted his roadkill recipes where the COVID-19 protocols used to be.

A great way to remind people that none of this is normal or OK, and that they are being fed lies, is to only serve turkey dogs and refuse to acknowledge it.

Instead of the usual red, white and blue

Adobe

Jell-O, put out a 9-by-13-inch pan of deep red, salty tomato aspic. When Todd spits out his first taste and asks what the hell it is, respond by saying, “It's tomato aspic because that's what I wanted to make and we no longer have a system of checks and balances to prevent abuse of power by the executive branch, Todd.”

Themed activities. Once you've finished deleting any anti-Trump posts or memes implying America may not be on the path to renewed greatness so you won't be detained while traveling, put down your phone and have some quality time with the family.

Gather everyone for a speed round of Slaver/Not a Slaver, running down the signatories of the Declaration of Independence. Was Benjamin Franklin an abolitionist or did he buy, sell and trade human beings? (Hint: That's a tricky one). What about Charles Cotesworth Pinckney? If you're not sure, you can take a wild guess. It's roughly a 45/55 chance!

Ask your cousin in the “We the People” T-shirt with the ragged flag on it to list the articles of the Constitution. Any of them. Really, anything beyond the Preamble. Psst: It's on the citizenship test.

Make the most of fireworks. It's the sparks that light up the night sky, but the boom that follows is a good time to let out that deep, soul-emptying rage scream you've been suppressing since last November. If your sketchy neighbor drove to Oregon for the genuinely dangerous stuff, you may even purge enough roaring frustration to pass out on your lawn for a few minutes of blank-minded bliss.

Of course, every year those same loud noises send dogs running panicked into the street and scurrying under beds to hyperventilate. Dogs have never been more relatable. Instead of making small talk with humans at a pool party while your stomach roils because the birthright citizenship enshrined in the 14th Amendment is being torched like the fuse on a Roman candle, join the canines. Get yourselves a couple of ThunderShirts, slide under the bed and ride it out together. ●

Blind

By Collin Yeo

setlist@northcoastjournal.com

*"Now some of us are weak, and some endure
And some people live their lives, with a violence that's pure and clean
But I saw a man cry once, down on his knees, in the corner of a darkened cell
And his pain meant nothing to me.
But I was younger then, and young men never die
When I walked out in the sun, I was strong, clear-minded, and blind."
— Swans, "Blind"*

A friend of mine lent me a book of writings from the Spanish Civil War this weekend, and I've been devouring the pieces in it like an old man sucking the marrow from a meal he once enjoyed with the frightening hunger of youth. I had forgotten about the exciting and strangely tailored compound words in the prosaic, modernist reporting of John Dos Passos, reflecting his youthful anarchist politics, in which were embedded the poisonous atoms of his jaded, reactionary later years. I've appreciated the different on-the-ground assessments of the madness of the time, when Falangist groups used the levers of tradition, institutions and the emerging fascist landscape of Europe to tragically defeat a rebellion, which was itself battling between the sometimes harsh collective order of communism and the opportunistic orgy of anarchy. All sides were fueled by ideological strictures tied up like sloppy tourniquets across a butchered landscape of old vendettas and older cultures. As the filmmaker Luis Buñuel put it, "No sooner had the people risen and seized power than they split into factions and began tearing one another to pieces. This insane and indiscriminate settling of accounts made everyone forget the essential reasons for the war."

Nothing is clean and easy. Snipers and summary executions are the agricultural practices in the terrifying fields of war when the blossoms of discontent and revolution come blooming.

Why am I writing about this? You know as well as I do. This week has another installment of the yearly reaffirmation of our national myth, and nobody seems very pleased with the current trajectory of this nation, no matter which faction they belong to — or think they belong to. There's a distinct pall of unease and stochastic violence fogging over every lens looking for the impossible land of "true" history, which, in America, has always been distorted anyway with the red, rosy lies of benevolent exceptionalism. And it has been building like this for quite some time. As a writer, I occasionally write about our world and its explosions as they ripple from history through the present. Hoping for some clarity. That is the extent of my participation in any act of violence, always just observation, never endorsement. But sometimes observing and recording is enough to rile up the chickenhawks running things and their constituents, whose idea of order is finding the tidiest way to turn screaming human fear and misery into dusty, silent bones under a stadium turf of profitable distractions. A nightmare machine running on cheap gas. And plentiful dipping sauces. Lord help the ruling faction caught wearing the golden cap and apron when the cheap gas and dipping sauces dry up. To the victor go the spoils, and as a nation we are nothing if not spoiled to the point of psychosis. Still, to quote the mortician in the opening scene of The Godfather, "I believe in America." Or at least in the people here, especially those wading through this mess with an eye (or two) toward cleaning up and helping out.

Take care of each other and stay safe.

Thursday

It's the beginning of the dog days of summer, which, for coastal Humboldt, means more of the schizo-shuffle between sun, wind and fog, while our inland empire gets hot, hot, hot, and the fear of wildfires is never far from anyone's mind. I suggest celebrating this time with some cool jazz, courtesy the Alley Cats, who will be playing a no-cover show at the Basement tonight, sometime after the doors open at 7:30 p.m.

Makenu plays Mario's Marino Bar at 8 p.m. on July 4.

Friday, July Fourth

Lots of ways to celebrate tonight, but I'm going to suggest something far-out, as in geographically. Dig this: In Shelter Cove, about as south west as you can go in Humco without a boat, is a fun joint called Mario's Marino Bar, where at 8 p.m. DJ Alan Espinosa will be serving up sonic teasers in anticipation of the night's main score at 10 p.m., the finest cumbia band in our county or any latitude, the mighty Makenu, doing what they do so damn well. Namely, makin' it so that you can be shakin' it, and $20 is a steal for a great band in a lovely outcrop of our homeland.

Saturday

The Creative Sanctuary continues its Jazz is Peace series with an homage to one of my heroes and the father of some of the greatest music this country ever produced, from the Delta womb of all good American sounds, my spiritual home, New Orleans. I'm talking about Satchmo himself, Mr. Louis Armstrong, who would be 124 years young on Aug. 4, had he not passed away 54 years ago tomorrow (or in the interim between). James Zeller, Katie Belknap, Lee Phillips, Matthew Seno and Ramsey Isaacs provide the musical foundation for our own local trumpet hero Don Hammerstedt. This is going to be a fine program for a lovely summer night. Doors at 7 p.m., with a sliding scale of $15-$30 to get inside the Arcata Playhouse. If you want something a little more cozy, low-key and free, I'm happy to report that Café Mokka is offering evening music again, with tonight's entertainment provided by the Flying Ohms, a "string duo plus," according to the venue. It starts at the same time, so you can see for yourself if you aren't feeling all that jazz.

Sunday

Speaking of jazz, the excellent jazz manouche group Canary and the Vamp is at it again at Fieldbrook Winery today at 2 p.m. The music is free but you have to call to reserve a table where you will be expected to pony up for some nice refreshments, which sounds like a pastoral midsummer delight.

Monday

The Secret Society of Silly Things is an improv comedy troupe that has been described favorably as a cargo cult formed from the airwave droppings of Whose Line is it Anyway? If that sounds interesting enough for a 10-spot investment at the door of Savage Henry Comedy Club, come on by. It's all lucky sevens tonight, as in a 7 p.m. on 7/7.

Tuesday

Hush child, listen to the sky tonight. If you are quiet enough, you will hear the antlers of the coming Buck Moon scrape the starlight as it fattens into fullness later this week.

Wednesday

How about a free movie night? Here are two options: At 5:30 p.m. at the Eureka Library, there will be a showing of a certain shark film that changed the game for thrillers 50 years ago this summer and launched the career of a certain brilliant director who would go on to create blockbusters out of charismatic archeologists and extraterrestrials.

Meanwhile, at 7 p.m. at Froth in Arcata, you can catch The Princess Bride, a perfect film written for the screen by its novelist William Goldman and directed by Rob Reiner in the golden era of his career, when he was a fantastic director, before he became an out-of-touch, uber-wealthy, scolding liberal meathead who mistakes giving money to conservative Democratic warmongers for fairytale heroism. ●

Collin Yeo (he/him) is politically homeless, which, like actual homelessness, is a constant lesson about the practiced values of all kinds of people.

Well, in Humboldt there's no parade with a squeaky tank, but you can still celebrate America with pomp and circumstance! Here's where you can find fireworks and fun this Fourth of July. First up, it's the Fortuna Fireworks Festival on Thursday, July 3, at Newburg Park from 5:30 p.m. until dark (free, $10 kids activities wristband, $5 parking). On Friday, July 4, at noon, it's time for the Ferndale Fourth of July Parade (free). Find a spot on Main Street, where Victorian buildings and waving flags set the scene for the classic Independence Day parade — a true small-town American experience. Arcata's Fourth of July Jubilee lights up the plaza from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. with food, artisans, music, kids' fun and a beer garden. Over in Eureka, the all-day Fourth of July Festival runs 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. in Old Town, offering two music stages, multiple city blocks blocked off with tasty local eats, craft vendors and more. Fireworks over the bay at 10 p.m. Please remember, no dogs, smoking/vaping, or alcohol allowed at this event.

FI: The Movie

F1 and the Artful Blockbuster

By John J. Bennett
screens@northcoastjournal.com

FI: THE MOVIE. All (well, most) of my constant pearl-clutching, tooth-gnashing lamentation at the state of American cinema comes from a place of love. I'm a generational relic, but surely not alone in experiencing many of my transcendent moments and epiphanic revelations while knelt at the altar.

This abiding affection is tempered by reticence and occasional contempt at the ever-increasing corporate whoring out of what I hold up as the greatest medium we as a species have yet devised to represent our collective urge toward self-expression and undying love of spectacle. Movies are so much larger than any of us, but they are as much the work of hands and hearts and minds as anything we've produced. I'm not sure I believe they can change the world anymore, but I know and believe that they have, because I have experiential evidence.

The sense of discovery and possibility borne of seeing movies — some great, most not, all important — has, in my life, been unrivaled. Art is the wellspring, and cinema combines and celebrates art of all media more holistically, more inclusively than any other known form of expression.

I'm repeating myself, but I know it and I'm grateful, because I have had occasion, in these recent dark years that may well signal the end of our tenancy on the planet, to celebrate rediscovered joy in movies that, because of and in spite of their outmoded, outsized Hollywood bona fides, have inspired more than a little of the exhilaration, uncertainty and joyfulness (innocence?) that defined the early days of our relationship.

I've seen almost every Joseph Kosinski movie, despite IMDb listing his height at 6 feet 4 inches (I distrust the tall, even though I count a few as intimates). I didn't watch Tron: Legacy (2010), because I have no connection to the source material and may have been (was) foolish and a little discriminatory at the time. But he arrived in Movieland seemingly fully vested, a maker of blockbusters and handler of stars the likes of which the industry hasn't really seen in decades. A dinosaur with laser-blood, Kosinski has, in a continuing act of entertainment magicks, allied himself with stars and producers of bygone eras to advance what we all could rightfully have pronounced a dead medium: the artful blockbuster.

We might all think of his output as crass and commercial, which to an extent it obviously is, but he is also one of a select few who can, within the ever-narrowing lane of widespread appreciation and approval, render large-scale, spectacular stories as earnest, uncynical celebrations of skill, craft and endurance. And F1, despite every capitalistic, potentially nasty thing about it, raises the bar yet again.

While motorsport, with its conspicuous consumption, egoism and courting of death, is perhaps an arcane, even barbaric pursuit, I've always been fascinated. I don't have the gene, the need to compete and excel that breeds exceptional racing drivers. Nor am I ever going to find myself in a conflict because of my allegiance to a team or driver. But racing, even at its tamer margins, is an electrifying, frustrating, community-building form of human expression that can, like cinema, free us and bring us together and make us feel alive.

Formula One has maybe always been a problematic, entitled, prejudicial branch of motorsport; it is, after all, the fastest, most dangerous, most advanced form of racing (competition?) we have. It's a waste of money for the billionaire elite and probably emblematic of the hubris that will end our species, but it's also impossible and fascinating. And now, with the apparent full cooperation of the FIA (the primary sanctioning body of international motorsport), Kosinski has put Brad Pitt in the seat of a racecar and made maybe the best racing movie yet.

Sonny Hayes (Pitt), a '90s phenom whose career was derailed by a horrific crash, has spent the intervening decades in whatever racing seat he can find from Daytona to Baja. His one-time teammate and perennial rival Ruben (Javier Bardem) has enjoyed greater success. Now an F1 team owner, he faces an ouster from his corporate board based on the low performance of his cars. He taps Sonny to re-enter the fray and help guide his talented lead driver Joshua Pearce (Damson Idris) to something better than last position on the grid.

This may be the most perfect vehicle of Pitt's career, with his taciturn, beautiful face and inimitable charm ideally suited to a racing driver who refuses to be counted out. And Kosinski, with director of photography Claudio Miranda, has found unparalleled ways to put us in the racecar. I'm still awaiting the commentary of Charlotte Hamilton, the F1 correspondent with whom I attended this screening, but she has informed me she approves. PG13. 156M. BROADWAY. ●

Ozempic, the Wonder Drug? Part 2

By Barry Evans

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

"The medication's going to be 50 percent of your journey, and the other 50 percent is still what you choose to eat and the exercise you're going to put in." — Obesity specialist Dr. Rocio Salas-Whalen

Last week, I discussed the mechanism of GLP-1, a popular semaglutide sold under the brand names Ozempic, Wegovy and others. While semaglutides are mainly prescribed for control of Type 2 diabetes (insulin resistance) and treatment of obesity, they're starting to look like magic bullets for a host of other health issues, including:

Cardiovascular disease: In 2024, the Food and Drug Administration approved semaglutides to treat heart disease after studies showed they could cut the risk of strokes and other heart-related deaths by 20 percent.

Kidney disease: Also approved by the FDA earlier this year. One study found semaglutides led to a 24 percent drop in the risk of kidney failure in patients with Type 2 diabetes.

Alzheimer's disease: Alzheimer's has been linked to insulin resistance in the brain, leading to ongoing trials that indicate semaglutides can reduce the incidence of Alzheimer's for people with Type 2 diabetes.

Depression: Ongoing trials, with promising indications that semaglutides can alleviate chronic depression.

Alcoholism: In a nine-week long double-blind trial last year, half of 48 alcoholics were given semaglutides, the other half placebos. The semaglutide group reported needing fewer drinks and less craving. Studies are now underway to see if semaglutides can be used to treat other addictions, including nicotine and opiates.

However, like all meds, semaglutides have downsides, including those no one knows about, since they're too new for long-term studies.

Expense. Until recently, you'd be looking at around $1,000 per month for one of the standard semaglutides. That's just come down to about $500 per month. As patents run out and pharma companies figure out generic workarounds, prices will surely keep dropping. (Even so, if only people with disposable income can afford these drugs, that could cement the stereotypical association between being fat and being poor.)

Long-term use. Like every diet and exercise plan, once someone comes off using semaglutides, chances are (in at least two-thirds of cases) they'll regain their original weight. Or worse: The common "yo-yo effect" often leads to patients ending up heavier than when they began the regime. The trick, according to obesity experts, is to treat semaglutides as adjuncts, not replacements, for nutrition and exercise. Ideally, obese patients' initial weight loss will motivate them to feel more in control of their bodies, leading them to embrace a healthy lifestyle. The goal, then, is to eventually reduce semaglutide injections to microdoses, or even wean off the drugs completely.

Unsuitability for "casual" weight loss. While they're very effective for obese patients (BMI 30+) who typically lose 15 to 20 percent of their body weight in the first year, they're not so good for someone slightly overweight who wants to drop 10 pounds for, say, an upcoming wedding. That's because a reduction in calories leads to losing both fat and lean body mass (i.e. muscle and bone). With obese patients, that's a worthwhile trade-off, but it's unhealthy for a slightly overweight person who can't afford to lose muscle tissue.

Side effects. These vary from uncomfortable to (in rare cases) dangerous. Many patients experience nausea, vomiting, diarrhea, constipation, increased heart rate and heartburn while the body adjusts to the meds.

With obesity levels everywhere rising exponentially, semaglutides offer the promise of controlling what otherwise looks like a pandemic. Still, as I see grocery shelves loaded with junk food and drink, I do wonder: Why are we treating the symptoms, rather than the cause? ●

HBMWD and RLCSO ANNOUNCE UPDATED WATERCRAFT RESTRICTIONS UNDER THE JOINT AQUATIC INVASIVE SPECIES PREVENTION PLAN FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

June 26, 2025

TRINITY COUNTY, CA – In a continued effort to protect Ruth Lake and the region's water infrastructure, the Humboldt Bay Municipal Water District (HBMWD) and the Ruth Lake Community Services District (RLCSO) have released an updated set of restrictions and best practices as part of their Joint Aquatic Invasive Species (AIS) Prevention Plan. These measures are designed to prevent the introduction and spread of invasive species such as Quagga Mussels, Zebra Mussels, and the recently detected Golden Mussel in California waterways.

Aquatic invasive species pose serious threats to local ecosystems, water quality, and water delivery infrastructure. Once established, these mussels can clog pipes and intakes, damage equipment, disrupt aquatic food chains, and cost millions of dollars in mitigation and maintenance. Watercraft from high-risk areas and/or tanks which cannot be drained pose the most significant threat to Ruth Lake.

Key Requirements of the AIS Prevention Plan Include:

- Mandatory watercraft inspections: for all vessels (including non-motorized) entering Ruth Lake, regardless of size or motor type.
- Mandatory 30-day quarantine: If a watercraft does not meet the yellow and red sticker exceptions as detailed in the AIS Prevention Plan, permission to launch at Ruth Lake is revoked for a period of thirty (30) days (if boat remains in quarantine during the 30-day period).
- Failed Inspections: Mandatory 30-day Quarantine for all failed inspections. All watercraft with ballast tanks will fail the inspection and be required to have a 30-day quarantine.
- Proof of decontamination: As an alternative to mandatory 30-day quarantine, proof of decontamination from a state approved facility with an intact exit band may be allowed.
- Expanded definitions of prohibited materials: including aquatic vegetation, standing bilge water, and bait water.
- Introduction of a mussel-detecting K9 unit, which will periodically patrol Ruth Lake facilities, launch areas, and boats to assist in the detection of invasive mussels and support enforcement of AIS protocols "These updates reflect our continued commitment to proactive prevention," said Michiko Mares, General Manager of HBMWD. "With the recent detection of Golden Mussels in California, it's more important than ever that we take collective action to protect Ruth Lake and our drinking water resources."

Caitlin Canale, General Manager of RLCSO, added: "Recreation is a valued part of our community, and these measures will help ensure Ruth Lake remains safe, clean, and accessible for future generations." Residents, visitors, and boaters are encouraged to follow the "Clean, Drain, and Dry" protocol and check with Ruth Lake CSD for updated requirements before visiting Ruth Lake. The full updated AIS Prevention Plan is available online at: <https://www.ruthlakecscd.org/sidebar/golden-zebra-quagga-mussel/> For questions or more information, please contact:

REDWAY COMMUNITY
SUMMARY OF PROPOSED
ORDINANCE NO. 2025-2026-01,
REVISING ORDINANCE NO. 7
ESTABLISHING RATES, RULES AND REGULATIONS FOR WATER SERVICE

By action adopted by the Board of Directors of the Redway Community Services District (hereinafter "the District") pursuant to the provisions of Government Code section 25124 (b) (1), the following Summary of Proposed Ordinance 2025-2026-01, an Ordinance revising the District's Ordinance No. 7 Establishing Rates, Rules and Regulations for Water Service, is hereby authorized to be published in a newspaper of general circulation throughout the jurisdiction of the District in order to notify citizens of a public hearing before the Board of Directors of the District to determine whether to adopt Ordinance 2025-2026-01. This public hearing is scheduled to occur on June 19th, 2025, at 6 p.m. at 3168 Redwood Drive, Redway, CA 95560. This Summary of Ordinance 2025-2026-01 proposes revisions to the District's existing Ordinance No. 7 establishing rates, rules and regulations for water service as follows:

1. Adds new section 01 specifying the purposes of the Water Ordinance, which are to set uniform requirements for providing public water supplies to District Customers for maximum possible beneficial use in compliance with all drinking water supply requirements of state and federal law.
2. Adds new section 02 which specifies the Scope of the Water Ordinance, which includes the setting of user rates, charges and fees for the equitable distribution of water supply costs among all District customers. The Water Ordinance also provides for an Application for Water Service procedure for new customers which procedure allocates the District's limited water supplies to new customers depending upon the then current capacity of the District to supply water to customers in the amount applied for.
3. Clarifies certain definitions of terms within the Ordinance in Section 1, and adds new definitions of terms for new classes of water service customers including Commercial Agricultural Water Service at Section 1.23 and Accessory Dwelling Unit Water Service at Section 1.32.
4. Revises the procedure for discontinuance of water supply for non-payment of water service rates, charges and/or fees in Section 10.1 by extending the delinquency period to 60 days after a water bill becomes delinquent before a Notice of Discontinuance of Water Supply may be sent to the delinquent customer and water disconnection procedures can be commenced.

5. Adds an updated description of the District's Backflow Protection and Cross-Control Protection Program at Section 2.8, which program has been approved by the State Water Resources Control Board.

6. Adds a new Section 6.6 regarding Accessory Dwelling Units which describes the circumstances under which water will be supplied to accessory dwelling units, and defines those situations in which a separate water meter connection and connection fee will be imposed for supplying water to an accessory dwelling unit, and those circumstances in which no new water meter connection or connection fee will be required.

7. Adds a new Section 4.1.0 (4) regarding Applications for Water Service which adds a new service application classification entitled "Commercial Agriculture Producer Classification". This section sets forth the minimum criteria defining a commercial agriculture producer and imposes the following requirements on such customers: (1) the filing of an Operations Plan which details the amounts of water required and water delivery and storage details; (2) imposes a water use forbearance period from May 15 to October 1 each year during which time the District lacks sufficient water supply capacity to serve such customers; and (3) establishes a water usage annual cap on the amount of water to be provided by the District to each such user.

A printed copy of the proposed Water Ordinance is available for inspection by any person during regular office hours in the administrative offices of the District at 3168 Redwood Drive, Redway, CA 95560. A copy of the Water Ordinance and this Summary is also posted at the District Office and on the District's website. This Summary has also been published pursuant to the requirements of California Government Code Sections 25120 through 25132.

Gregory Lee Rael

Gregory Lee Rael, 75, passed away at his Bayside home on June 14, 2025.

Greg lived a life of incredible depth in the outdoors, overseas, and in the courtroom. He was a friend and mentor to many, a husband, a brother, an uncle, a grandfather, a counselor to those who ran afoul of the law, an amateur architect, a painter, a trader of wood and lumber, and a hunter. He was a collector of artifacts – some valuable, most not, but all with a story behind them. Moreso, he was a collector of interesting people from all walks of life and from all over the world. Greg's seemingly infinite stories were slow and circuitous talks that inevitably led to unexpected and often hilarious conclusions. An alum of and counselor at Camp Unalayee in the Trinity Alps, he met and mentored many young people over the course of his life and became deeply familiar with the lakes, trails, and mountains in the wilderness areas of Northern California. He was impressed by people of character and deeply admired people with rare skills – whether they were privileged and educated, but especially if they struggled in life.

Born on April 17, 1950, in Compton, California to Isador "Izzy" Rael and Paula Jocelyn Rael (Goren), he was named after his grandfather Greg Rael. The family moved to Whittier, California where Greg attended elementary school and La Serna High School. During a YMCA trip to Peru, he met his lifelong friend Becky Evans. Greg attended Stanford University and spent his junior year studying in Italy, where he became fluent in Italian. He then earned his law degree from Stanford Law School. Stanford was an institution he loved, and its medical facilities later cared for him as he wrestled with complicated health issues. He married Rhonda Parker in 2002. The two loved to travel, have friends and family over for elaborate dinners, garden, and spend time at their cabin near Somes Bar on the Klamath River. They were married nearly 23 years.

Greg first came to Humboldt County when he completed a law school internship, working for both the district attorney and the public defender. He decided to stay on as a public defender for much longer than is common, insisting it was critical to understanding the law and the legal profession. He met John Young in the public defender's office, and they opened a private practice. After they closed that office, Greg opened his own criminal defense practice and had a long and storied career before retiring at the age of 74. His reputation as an ethical and fair attorney brought him many cases and clients, both high profile and otherwise.

Greg's longtime assistant Marlene Birnie was his companion through his legal adventures and became his close friend and confidante through many ups and downs. Greg was not above providing legal services in exchange for, say, a load of manzanita firewood, or a few days' worth of work building a new structure at his beloved cabin. He considered the property among his greatest works of art and the fulfillment of his parents' dream to own a cabin. Greg also loved hunting in the Trinity Alps with his brother Dennis and friends and came to know the area around Scott Mountain well. Always maintaining a connection to his roots, Greg made a number of pilgrimages to New Mexico where his family was from. He visited the Santuario in Chimayo each time he went to New Mexico and made sure to bring back exquisite carved santos (saints) that he purchased from the Lopez family for decades. Greg and Rhonda made one last trip to the Santuario in May.

Many will miss Greg's wit, advice, tremendous generosity, counsel, humor, and warmth. His was a life well-lived, and those who were a part of it have lived life better because of him.

Greg is survived by his wife Rhonda (Parker); his granddaughters Dayna, Shelby, and Macie; his brother Dennis and his wife Carol Falkenthal; nieces, Trula and Coco Rael; stepchildren Darren and Chad Brittain and Angela Pialorsi; and his Aunt Rosie Orona; his brothers-in-law David (Carol) and Kent (Sheila Parker) and his mother-in-law Arlene Parker. He is preceded in death by his parents Isador and Paula; his grandfathers, Greg Rael and Morris Goren; his grandmothers Lucy Rael and Clara Fischer (Perlmutter) and his stepson Gino Pialorsi.

A celebration of Greg Rael's life will be held on July 12, at 1 p.m. at the Bayside Grange.

BOOKKEEPING SERVICES

In search of a seasoned bookkeeper who can use free or low-cost PT help in exchange for mentorship as I'm transitioning to the field.

I bring a strong foundation (BA in math, several years experience as AP accounting technician, and high marks in QuickBooks class at CR), and now seek hands-on experience and guidance.

I'm an established professional in education and libraries with a strong work ethic and many great local references. Based in Eureka but willing to travel between McKinleyville and Fortuna.

If you know someone who might be a fit—or if that someone is you—I'd love to connect. Happy summer!
